What is a Successor Trustee?

Setting up a trust allows the individual creating the trust – the grantor – to place property in the trust that will be managed by the trustee (often the grantor themselves) until the grantor passes away. However, many trusts will also name a successor trustee – a person who will be responsible for properly administering the trust should the trustee become either incapacitated or pass away.

FEBRUARY CELEBRATIONS!

Join us in celebrating these holidays this month and share how you observed them on our social media!

Conservatorship and Guardianship Abuse Awareness Day

February 1st is Conservatorship and Guardianship Abuse Awareness Day!

Conservatorship and Guardianship Abuse Awareness Day is observed annually on February 1. The day aims to raise awareness about abuses of power within the conservatorship and guardianship system, which was created to care for people with disabilities or illnesses impairing their decision-making abilities. However, some guardians and conservators take this as an opportunity to control and manipulate their wards.

1. They provide safety

There's a sense of safety in knowing that your health care and finances are handled by someone capable.

2. They lift the weight

These services were created to lighten the load of dealing with difficult moments in life, struggling with illnesses, and managing financial matters.

3. They help with organization

Conservators and guardians are legally tasked to provide organization to those in need.

4. They're almost free

While filing for guardianship is free, there is a small fee for filing for conservatorship.

5. They're after best interests

Although abuse cases exist, conservatorship and guardianship are meant to work in the best interest of the person in need of these services.
